The Emory Medal is the highest University award given to alumni. It honors distinguished service to Emory or the Emory Alumni Association (EAA), service to the community, and/or outstanding professional achievement.

The recognition of distinguished alumni began in 1946 with the establishment of the Alumni Association Award of Honor—predecessor of the Emory Medal. The Emory Medal is one of the University’s most prestigious honors—just 150 have been given since the award was established. The current Emory Medal was designed and cast in 1987. The Medal is emblazoned with Emory’s seal, which features the University motto: Cor prudentis possidebit scientiam. Translated: “The prudent heart will possess knowledge.”

Recipients of the Emory Medal are selected by election of the Emory Alumni Board based upon one or more of the following criteria. Nominations are accepted throughout the year. Please submit this Nomination Form together with up-to-two optional one-page letters describing how the Nominee meets at least one of these criteria. Emory Medalists are recognized for their accomplishments in at least one of the following areas:

- Distinguished service to Emory, the EAA, or a constituent alumni association.
- Distinguished community or public service.
- Distinguished achievement in business, the arts, the professions, government, or education.

Recipients of an honorary degree from Emory are selected for the Emory Medal only under special circumstances.
